Abstract: In the report they are presented some basic statements related to clusters as a form of collaboration in various spheres of economic activity and their relationship with the transfer of knowledge as a key process for business and social development, based on network cooperation and the possibilities for intensifying the dissemination and use of transferred knowledge among cluster participants and relevant stakeholders. The main resulting aspects are presented in a synthesized way – successful transformation into working business and socially focused solutions, multi-directional effects and benefits for the participants in the clusters and the main stakeholders.

Keywords: Clusters, Knowledge transfer, Effects and Benefits.
